The characters are all people of that locality, with the exception of the two villains, and their appearance urnishes the motive for some very strong ramatic scenes. There is a pretty love tory running through the piece and a oodly sprinkling of bright comedy. Below is a criticism from the Virginian liot, of Norfolk:

Mr. Rex at the Beach.

Mary Anderson Declines Offer Mary Anderson has refused a guarantee of $150,000 to come to this country to act or give readings. James W. Morrissey visited Miss Anderson at her home in England and presented a letter requesting her to come here on a professional Tribune office requiring its dramatic critic, William Winter, to attend all dramatic performances, writing his criticisms after he had seen them. It has been charged that Mr. Winter frequently writes his criticisms at his home on Staten Island without even taking the trouble of going to the theatre, and the publicky given to this fact by Henry Miller in his speech at the Hudson Theatre recently has caused the edict to go forth, with the result that Mr. Winter will have to spend his nights in New York.

Ermete Novelli, the greatest Italian actor of the period, will make his first appearance. In America next season. For the past eighteen months he has been under contract with Liebler and Company to play here, but for various reasons his American debut has been from time to time postponed. George Tyler will confer with him in Florence early next month and will complete arrangements for the tour. Signor Novelli will bring his own company and will appear in a repertoire of his most successful roles.

Must Have a Donkey.

Must Have a Donkey.

"I don't know what I'd do with a play that hadn't a donkey in it," said Raymond Hitchcock the other night in his dressing room at the Broadway Theatre, New York. "I suppose I got the habit in my early 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' days. Once, I remember, they selzed our donkey in a little town down south and we tried to go on without him, but couldn't. So three of us organized ourselves into a committee and went back to abduct the critter. When the donkey recognized me he set up such a fearful series of hechaws that the deputy sheriff was awakened and there was pretty nearly a pitched battle. Then as a last resort I wept bitterly over the loss of my beloved animal, and I did it so well that the deputy joined our show, donkey and all, and we finally won out. I'm superstitious about these little beasts, and that is one of the reasons why there's a donkey in "The Yankee Consul."

David Belasco has offered Manager Dingwall, of the Broadway Theatre, his production of Joseph Arthur's drama of life in India, Seirine, for an extended term next season at that house. Mr. Belasco, it is said, intends to spend between $50,000 and $100,000 on this production. Mr. Arthur will sail for Europe under Mr. Belasco's direction in June, and after negotiations looking to the production of this play in one of the mest prominent London theatres, will go to India—with which country, by the way, he

Bird and Bottle.

A new feature of "Woodland," the latest of the Pickley-Luders operas, at the Trement Thealre, Boston, is a "bird and bottle" dance that has made a sensational success. One of the dancer represents a bird sid the other a champagne bottle, and the gay frivolity of the act is described as being quite delightful.
